For well over 200 years the American farmer has shaped America and fed the world. Farmers risked everything to homestead, build farms, raise crops and livestock. They had to face Indians, rustlers, harsh winters, disease and drought to bring their goods to market. Any one of these calamities could wipe out their crops and livestock, causing them to lose everything they had toiled so hard for. Farmers enjoy work days that during harvest season may go 24 hours a day. Through all this they raised families that have carried on the farming tradition for generations.

Today's farmer doesn't have it easy, they still work the same long hours never knowing if they will be struck with a calamity to wipe them out. They are well educated conservationists that see themselves as stewards of the land. Farming in the United States today is a $647 Billion a year industry, $100 billion of that is exported to feed the world. 4.6 million farmers toil on their own farms, and another 22 million workers produce, process, sell and trade America's farm products.

Only 100 numbered guns plus a proof Tribute to the American Farmer will be produced per state. They are offered on a first come - first serve basis.
